BIOGRAPHICAL/HISTORICAL NOTE

Samuel A. Cartwright (1793-1863) was born in Fairfax County, Virginia, and attended medical school in Pennsylvania. In 1825, he married Mary Wren of Natchez, Mississippi and the two had at least one child, Mary Cartwright, who later married William Alexander Gordon of Liverpool, England (1828-1885). Cartwright practiced medicine in Huntsville, Ala., Natchez, Miss., and finally New Orleans, where he relocated in 1848 and became a professor at the University of Louisiana, in New Orleans. He specialized in diseases common to the American South and to African Americans. He served at one time as a surgeon under General Andrew Jackson, and during the Civil War he served as a Confederate Army physician when he was charged with improving the sanitary conditions in camps around Vicksburg and Port Hudson. He was honored for his investigations into yellow fever and cholera. He died in Jackson, Mississippi in 1863.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

Correspondence addresses Cartwright's medical career, contemporary politics, attitudes toward slavery, and the need for an emphasis on regional values in Southern education. Prominent correspondents include Jefferson Davis, John Slidell, Henry Clay, and John A. Quitman. Letters (1850-1864) between Cartwright's wife, Mary Wren, their daughter Mary and her husband, William Alexander Gordon, concern family matters and Confederate civilian experiences. A treatise on "camp dysentery" and its cure is included, as are published pamphlets discussing Cartwright's racial theories and an unidentified photograph. A two volume diary (1837) kept by Cartwright during his travels in Europe provides his impressions of Italy, Switzerland, Germany, and France, and his reflections on the geographic, social, and technological differences between Europe and America.

SERIES DESCRIPTIONS

[The collection is arranged chronologically, but like items are described in groups below.
See the Container List for description reflecting physical arrangement]

Series I, Professional Papers, 1826-1858

Dr. Samuel A. Cartwright's correspondence covers issues such as politics, medicine, slavery, and education in the South. A letter from Henry Clay at Ashland discusses the protective tariff policy in the U.S. and also expresses his hope that the spirit of abolitionism will be extinguished in the north (October 14, 1844). Letters from R.J. Walker and Lewis Cass in Washington bring up the Oregon question concerning the boundary between American and English territories. Both correspondents discuss the issue of expansion into North America and question the possibility of war over it (August 1, 1845; May 4, 1846). Letters from General John A. Quitman also address the protective tariff controversy and his refusal to submit to government restrictions on westward expansion (September 9, 1844; October 2, 1850). A letter to Quitman from Cartwright discusses the need for good medical care and prevention of disease in the military, as well as the incidence, treatment, and cure for dysentery (August 27, 1846).

A number of letters come from Jefferson Davis in which he explains the virtues of slavery and how the advantages of it outweigh the disadvantages (June 10, 1849). In other letters, he discusses his opposition to naturalization laws as they relate to fugitive slaves (July 17, 1859), and also provides his opinion concerning the current state of and possibility of the construction of levees along the Mississippi River (April 25, 1857). Davis discusses his health issues with Cartwright and refers to a visit to New Orleans to have his eye examined (September 23, 1851). He also mentions having sent a field hand to Cartwright for medical attention (April 25, 1857). Letters from C.K. Marshall praise Cartwright's medical publications and request his thoughts on yellow fever (August 30, 1853) and discuss their mutual views on slavery and northern abolitionists. He also expresses his wish for educational programs in schools that would teach southern writers and books (October 23, 1854). Also included is a letter from John Slidell discussing happenings in the Senate (February 11, 1857), and one from Rev. Joseph B. Stratton informing him that the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, consisting of ministers and elders from around the world, would be arriving in New Orleans soon and inquires about the precautions and warnings he should be aware of to avoid the spread of diseases (January 12, 1858).

Other documents include a paper entitled "One Dose Cure for Camp Dysentery" (undated) and letters informing Cartwright that his dissertation was awarded a prize by the Medical Community of Harvard University (August 10, 1826) as well as elected Honorary Member of the Medical Society of Virginia (December 28, 1843).

Two publications by Cartwright are included in the collection and are entitled "Ethnology of the Negro or Prognathous Race: A Lecture Delivered November 30, 1857 Before the New Orleans Academy of Sciences” (New Orleans: 1858) and “Unity of the Human Race Disproved by the Hebrew Bible” (DeBow’s Review, August 1860). Also included is a publication written about Cartwright entitled “Samuel A. Cartwright and States’ Rights Medicine” by Mary Louise Marshall (reprinted from New Orleans Medical and Surgical Journal, August 1940).

Series II, Family Correspondence, 1851-1864

Family correspondence consists of letters of Mary Wren Cartwright, her daughter Mary Cartwright, and son-in-law William Alexander Gordon. This includes love letters between Gordon and Mary Cartwright before their marriage (1851-1852), as well as letters written to Gordon from Mary Wren Cartwright discussing her daughter’s health and her opinion of their relationship (April 16, 1852, undated). A letter from Mary at Bladon Springs, Ala., to her mother talks of her new son and activities going on at the medical resort where she is staying (October 20, 1854). The remaining correspondence consists of letters from Mary Cartwright Gordon in New Orleans to her husband during the Civil War in which she provides news from home and of the family (1861-1864). An unidentified photograph is also included (undated).

Series III, Manuscript volumes, 1837

A two volume diary (1837) kept by Cartwright during his travels in Europe provides his impressions of Italy, Switzerland, Germany, and France, and his reflections on the geographic, social, and technological differences between Europe and America. In the diary, he discusses topics such as agriculture, labor, architecture, and social norms in the places he visits and relates them to the same topics in America. A photocopy of the first volume of the diary is available in Box 1, Folder 6.
